Larkus, 25th Commander of the Blue Watch, Shield of the Innocent

We finally found out where the dark alchemists hides. 'Morrow we'll march to defeat that foul creature. We'll find out whether the superstitious rumors 'bout him are true. 'heard the alchemist created a monstrosity that serves him, but I reckon this nothin' but smallfolk talk.

Traveling men tell tales of that creature in his service, a creature beyond the light of our holy sun, as big as the biggest men we have in the company, but 'parently it can move through the tin'est gap. Can't imagine how that'be possible. Schattenwald taught me not wonder much 'bout fairy tales and suchsense, I just pray everything works out and we can defeat this alchemist bastard.

Larkus, 25th Commander of the Blue Watch, Shield of the Innocent, Slayer of the dark Alchemist

Mission was a GREAT SUCCESS! Rumors about this shadow creature were false, as I thought. Only the alchemist alone fought us with his dark sorcery. He threw his foul concoctions at us, but nothing resists the righteousness of a Watcher's Blade!

Now he and his dark magic are history and his gold now belongs to the Watch. So much Gold!! Brought everything with us. Couldn't even count all the coinage and gems. Even found a giant chest we couldn't yet pry open.

What riches might this still hold? Will let the men bring it with rest of the treasure into the cellar and lock the old trap door shut. The men that carried the damn chest said it gave them the creeps. Like the bloody thing was shivering. Called it alive. Superstitious Nonsense!! A chest is not alive.

Come 'morrows sun, we crack open this big chest and find out whatever 's in there. But I hear my brothers and sisters at arms singing and celebrating right now. By the light we earned it! I better join and drink with them. After all, that is the duty of a good commander
